

INTRODUCTION TO “THE YEATMAN WINE BOOK”

Most guests who come to visit The Yeatman immediately fall in love with the view when they first set eyes on the stunning landscape overlooking the historic center of Porto. The Yeatman beyond his view and incomparable beauty, is an embassy to the great wine producers of Portugal, revealing unique wines with enormous variety, depth and personality.

A Tale of Wine

In this “Wine Book” we present our complete wine list, covering over 1,200 wines: 94% from Portugal and about 6% from other parts of the world. We have created the best anthology of wines in Portugal, from large estates to intriguing boutique wineries. Some of the wines are only available in very small quantities; others will be available to the public for the first time at The Yeatman, and some are exclusive to The Yeatman. The Yeatman prides itself in possessing an unparalleled choice of wood aged and Vintage Ports from the most distinguished Port houses and estates, including rare wines and collectors’ items seldom found on any wine list.

Long Story Short

Considering each season calls for different flavours, textures, temperatures and wines, we have also created a seasonal wine lists featuring over 109 wines available by the glass, which not only features wines at their peak but those with the depth and complexity to fully complement the cuisine of Chef Ricardo Costa. This enables you to experience high quality wines, creating your own pairings to discover a wealth of matching and contrasting flavours, as you are taken on a journey through Portugal’s best.

The Yeatman Wine Team will be glad to guide you through the list, introduce you to some of our favourites, or if you prefer, challenge you to try something different. We want you to feel confident with your selection, have a memorable sensory experience, and above all, discover the beauty of Portuguese wines!

This is our goal. This is our commitment. We hope you enjoy!

Wines from Portugal

The volcanic Açores (Azores) islands are located in the middle of the Atlantic, nearly 1,000 miles from the coast of Portugal. Three of the nine islands—Pico, Graciosa, and Terceira—have DOC zones, although conditions in the middle of the ocean are not suited to viticulture. The fortified white wines of Pico DOC are the most highly regarded wines of the islands, they are generally consumed locally and viticulture occupies only a small part of the island. The island's volcano the highest point in Portugal is 7,500 feet above sea level. The vineyards, are sheltered from sea winds by walls from the black volcanic stone.

Stretching up from the Algarve is the Alentejo, home of cork oaks and olive trees and covering approximately one third of Portugal. The flat terrain is interspersed with the occasional “monte” or low hill on which a large estate or small village is perched. Where as in the north of Portugal, most wineries begin with the word “Quinta”, in the Alentejo they begin with “Herdade” or “Monte”. The climate is incredibly hot in the summer, requiring irrigation in many large vineyards. The Alentejo has been the standard bearer for Portugal’s wine revolution, adopting modern winemaking methods with great results and international acclaim, using both indigenous and imported grape varieties.

This geographical area covers the five quality regions of Dão, Bairrada, Beira Interior, Lafões and Távora-Varosa labels. The region stretches from the Atlantic Ocean in the west to the Spanish border in the east. Wine has been made in these regions since Roman times, when monks planted large areas of vines to take advantage of the region's excellent climate, altitude, and limestone, slate and granite soils. Still whites and reds dominate this area although there are a number of sparkling wines that are worth seeking out. Most of the wines, especially those based on the Baga grape, have an intense red colour and excellent ageing potential that are well worth the wait.

Portugal's Estremadura region stretches from the west of Lisbon, along the Atlantic coast, up until just below Coimbra and comprises various sub-regions. The vines are sheltered from the cold Atlantic winds and fogs, enabling the grapes to ripen well and produce concentrated wines. The vines are planted in sandy soils often at depths of only 8m, where the roots establish themselves in a layer of clay. This region produces good value wines, where international grapes such as Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet thrive amongst the many traditional varietals. The regulations are fairly liberal recommending around 30 red and 30 white grapes.

The island of Madeira sits strategically in the middle of the Atlantic, between the Portuguese and west African coasts. The climate is typically Mediterranean with mild temperatures throughout the year and a low temperature range, though there is always high atmospheric moisture. The soils are volcanic and very fertile. As the island's relief is very irregular, the vines are planted on small slopes, most of them in the southern part of the island. Madeira wine is noted for its unique winemaking process where, during ageing, the wines can reach temperatures as high as 60°C (140°F) for an extended period of time and are deliberately exposed to some levels of oxidation. Due to this unique process, Madeira is a very robust wine that can be quite long lived, even after being opened.

The Setúbal Peninsular wine region is flanked by the Tagus Estuary, Atlantic Ocean and Sado River, where fishing used to be the main industry but where tourism and wine have now taken precedence. The sandy soils are planted mainly with the Castelão grape, yielding soft, early-maturing red wines, many of which age well. Setúbal Moscatel is the best known wine in the region: a fortified wine made from Muscat grapes which spend a long time ageing in barrel, depending on the brand.

Portugal's most remote and rugged region, Trás-os-Montes (or "Beyond the Mountains") is home to both Douro and Port wines. For centuries, the steep slopes of the Douro valley have been tamed by vine terraces plunging down to the river; unique and spectacular scenery, in what is a classified UNESCO World Heritage site. Whilst Port may be the Douro's most famous product, table wine is produced in greater quantity and is capturing the imagination of producers and consumers alike. Searing summers and bitterly cold winters, together with slate and granite soils, are producing some of Portugal's most emblematic wines.

The fresh breeze from the Atlantic blows over the lush, beautiful countryside north of Lisbon, providing some vital coolness to the Ribatejo, currently one of Portugal's most up and coming wine districts. The area is alive with ambition and enthusiasm, under the expert guidance of a number of young winemakers who, with pride and skill, are maintaining and developing the area's wine traditions. Much less wine is produced here today than ten years ago, but the quality is so much higher, with red wines being overwhelmingly dominant. Estates are large where vineyards count as a small yet highly significant proportion of the land. Other areas are given over to fruit and vegetable cultivation and the breeding of horses.

This cool, wet north-western region of Portugal with its rolling hills and small vineyards planted mainly in granite soils, is home to “Vinho Verde”, literally translated as “green wine”. The climate is influenced by sea breezes from the Atlantic Ocean, precipitation is high and temperatures are mild throughout the year. The resulting white wines are light, aromatic and crisp. Malolactic fermentation can occur after bottling, giving these wines some carbonation. The wines can be both red or white, but most of the exported Vinhos Verdes are white.
